Reasons for comment:

Comments: The wall has weathered and aged well blending in with the surroundings. The fruit trees and climbing plants are well established having been in situ for at least eighteen months and a helpful addition for the wildlife. Birds have been nesting in the wall and pollinators making use of the flowers on the greenery. If I remember correctly there will be lighting added to the exterior of the wall which will help to illuminate a dark stretch of the bridleway. Considering that recently the crossing close by was improved to accommodate access for all to the green circle the lights will be an asset improving safety and security.

But not least imagine the detrimental impact on our environment and local communities if the wall had to be modified or replaced.
The disruption that this would cause for changes to a structure that does not impact any local residents or businesses.
The negative environmental impact far outweighs the need to rebuild or reduce the wall and the greenery growing around it.

Kind regards
