Reasons for comment:
Comments:	I know building needs to happen and the town is expanding. However green corridors are essential, ecologically as well as for the well being of citizens. The fields are an open public ground effectively. Look at the number of people that use them. And it is a green route right into the heart of HH. You just need to look at Google maps to see this. It's good for encouraging people to come to Haywards heath, giving them and residents an easy route straight into the countryside for a walk. I can see why it would feel logical to fill the gap in buildings but the green space is critical.

Especially if there is a new development up by borde hill lane which I think would make a lot more sense if I had to pick one. Ultimately I think it would be beneficial for the well-being of residents and the planet not to build on this oasis of green.

Kind regards
