Dear Anna

Thank you for your note. I have had the opportunity to confer with my client who has had discussions with the neighbour on this matter and has confirmed that the existing boundary treatment (A,B & C as referred to in 'your' note) is retained as existing.

This includes the conservatory wall (C) making up the boundary section (whilst the conservatory behind is demolished as per planning drawings). So in essence the integrity of the boundary from a containment point of view is unchanged. I hope this allays any fears of gaps for dogs to get out.

Do let me know that this assurance from my client suffices.

Many thanks
Steve

Dear Steven

I have received a comment from the next door neighbour to this site regarding the proposed element of the scheme which involves the demolition of the side wall of the existing conservatory, which forms a boundary treatment between the rear gardens of No 38 and 40 currently, see red mark up on the extract below, and her comments attached:

Please can you ask your client what boundary treatment will be constructed in place of the conservatory wall, or if the intention is to retain this form of enclosure? I understand that the neighbour has concerns as she has dogs that could get through the gap.

I look forward to hearing your clients intended solution.

Thank you.

Anna
