Dear Andy,

Thank you for the email regarding the ecological position of the site. As I mentioned previously, the works had commenced for the office building and this included a full site clearance, including a levelling of the site, hardcore base formation and with topsoil to the site boundary. On-site works have been paused until the current application has been determined. If the current application is unsuccessful, then the construction works on the office building will recommence. The site has been left in this temporary state for a few months, and we visited it today to photograph the current condition - Photo attached. As you can see there are small amounts foliage starting to appear, but the site is predominantly bare earth. The site is a construction site and it seems the a walk over survey would just confirm the obvious. Hopefully this helps?

With kind regards,

You don't often get email from laura.downs@naturespaceuk.com. Learn why this is important

Good morning Andy,

Thank you for consulting us on the above application. I have been reviewing the submitted documents and I can see that it has been cleared of vegetation. I wondered if it might be possible to get some clearer photos of the bunds/piles of soil that have been left on site. The reason I ask is that although the vegetation has been cleared, if these piles have been left a while and started to develop vegetation themselves (which is potentially looks like they may have), they may provide some opportunities for GCN. Therefore it would be good just to see the current state of the site a bit more clearly

Best wishes,
