

With regard to the tree at the rear of No.5 Johnson Drive which is causing extensive damage to my fence, breaking up my paving and causing my shed to lean out of plum.

Due to the tree, the previous owners of 5 Johnson Drive had their rear fence replaced as the roots pushed it over, I also have had to replace my rear fence due to the same problem being caused by the roots of this tree.

Also currently the tree trunk at ground level has now pushed against my party post moving it towards my side, it is also pushing the fence out of alignment with the roots breaking up my paving.

When I had the rear fence replaced I asked the contractor to repair the fence and put it back in alignment, which he tried but found it difficult so ended up fixing some screws through the post and harris rail to try and hold it together.

Also he re-plumb your back fence post which was being pushed out of plum towards the fields.

And the canopy of the tree has become very large and is casting a huge shadow over the rear of my garden with limbs now extending quite a bite over my fence.

As far as I know the primary cause of this problem is that along our rear fence line the builders put in a soak away and the roots to this tree are following the line of this as it is nice and soft allowing the roots to expand, thus causing the aforementioned damage.
