North – Annexe which appears to have previously been a barn and incorporated into the main dwelling through a single storey link between.

South – Main wing of the dwelling which appears to be the original and has extended to the southern elevation through a catslide roof and dormer above. Looking further south is the listed neighbouring site in the distance.

East – Extensive fields stretching out to the east with woodland in the distance. The Eastern facing elevation incorporates two dormers at roof level.

West – Roadside with mature boundary planting acting as the boundary treatment between the roadside.

Streetscene – Sporadically placed dwellings with a rural character to the area with boundary hedgerow abutting either side of the highway.
