

Avoid Planning Permission

Our Mobile home cabins meet all the requirements of the 1968 Caravan Act. Therefore no planning permission is normally required if you want to build a mobile home within the garden of your existing dwelling to be used as an extra room in addition to the main house. When you are looking for a granny annex in your garden for a family member, mobile homes are a great choice as they do not require Planning Permission. Even though you most likely will not need planning permission for the mobile home it is recommended to check with the local planning department before installing one.

AVOID PLANNING PERMISS

AV-8006

Compact, welcoming, and cosy wooden house MAX M seems to be specifically created to become your favourite lounging space in the garden, allowing you to admire the beauty you've created in your surroundings. It could even transform into a temporary accommodation for your guests or family members visiting for the weekend. If properly insulated, such a house could serve as an independent living space as well. For your utmost convenience, an insulated version of this model is available as well.

Important: this mobile cabin home meets all the requirements of the 1968 Caravan Act – therefore, no Planning Permission is usually required if you want to build it within the garden of your existing dwelling to be used as an extra space next to the main house. However, we highly recommend checking with the local planning department before installing it.
