Hi Stefan

Further to my previous email I note that we have revised plans showing a solid 1.5m high close boarded fence with planting to both the internal and external sides. As previously noted, a more open design to the fence would be preferable, but on balance, given the fencing which appears from Streetview to have been previously present I don't think that an objection to the fence as shown could be sustained. With respect to the planting, I note the inclusion of some plants to the outside of the fencing, but this does not appear to be continuous enough to constitute a hedge. I would defer to the tree officer as to the suitability of the species proposed, but denser planting to both sides would be preferable, and I would repeat that this should ideally be of native species (the white cedar in particular does not appear to meet this criterion).

Thanks,

Emily
