Hello All,

Thank you for your time earlier this afternoon to review the options.

As discussed, please see attached sketch showing a raised junction which could be considered, should speeding be a long-term persistent issue along that stretch of the road. The other junctions, other than the CfOS one, are not suitable for a raised table owing to their proximity to the toucan crossing, bus stops, roundabouts and right-hand lane filter. The CfOS is the only potential location for this intervention, which would work with the pedestrian crossing as well.

Kind regards,

Sorry,

But have another commitment at that time tomorrow. I could do between 3-4 if you are happy not to have MSDC attend or my diary is relatively free Thursday/Friday this week or Monday and Wednesday next week.

Below is a bit of consideration to the comments raised.

We are a little nervous about agreeing to the speed calming solution ahead of knowing if or how much a speeding issue there is.

- Setting appropriate triggers for additional measures prior to the speed surveys and identifying what could be delivered is needed. I don't want to be recommending the lpa discharge the condition without setting out what could be delivered and when creating potential issues down the line. I believe the threshold of average speeds to the maximum allowable within the WSCC speed limit policy is a fairly high bar.

We are also uncertain about the suitability of the timing of the speed surveys as if carried out prior to development and occupation of the land adjacent to WBLR, any surveys may not necessarily be capturing the representative long term use of the road, and development of the land may take a number of years to complete.

I'd completely agree that development of the plots and associated activity would create a sense of place and support lower speeds on this link. The two phased approach suggested in the below deals with this with shorter term measures proposed prior to the plots being built out and then additional surveys once the plots have started occupation.

Good morning Stephen,

Thank you for the below. Would a revised wording including reference to those two measures suffice?

"Within 6-month of opening of the road to live traffic, we will undertake speed monitoring through use of Automatic Traffic Counter (ATC) for a period of one week and then repeat after one month. The locations for the monitoring sensors are to be discussed and agreed with WSCC as Highway Authority. Subject to the period when the road is open, we will agree the start of the monitoring with WSCC to align with anticipated traffic/monitoring period.

In consultation with WSCC, subject to the outcome of the speed monitoring demonstrating that the average speed across the new road, exceeds 35mph (average 12-hr, weekday 85th percentile speeds), agreed mitigation measures will be implemented. Those measures will be based on a combination of either:

- a. Use of vehicle activated signage to direct driver behaviour towards reducing speed. This measure would be short term during phase implementation.

b. Long term post completion of the phases and increased occupation, should speeding still be a persistent issue, raised tables can be implemented across the junctions. Details of raised tables to be reviewed and agreed with WSCC prior to implementation. We will aim to have either measure implemented within 18-months of receipt of the speed survey analysis and will agree the implementation period with WSCC."

Bava,

Id agree that carriageway narrowing wouldn't be suitable

A raised table would have a speed reducing effect and could be suitable, another possible options to explore could be vehicle activate signage – the effect of this maybe more temporary in nature but could support a reduction in speeds until the adjoining parcels are built out (with associated turning movements/activity to reduce speeds).

Good morning Stephen,

The road has been designed for the 30mph, on a bus route, with both formal controlled and uncontrolled pedestrian crossings, and streetlight. There is no straight long run akin to be enticing for higher speeds.

Measures for mitigation would be limited to speed table across the junctions to break the length of the carriageway, should speeding be found to be an issue. Width restrictions would not be appropriate as the road is primarily on a curve along its entire length.

If that is acceptable, I will ask Jackson to provide a sketch showing how a speed table could be implemented.

Hi Stephen,

Thank you for your comments and steer. Taking those on board, please see below proposed reworded response:

Bava.

Having discussed with others I would suggest that the average speed is used as that's what we set speed limits upon.

Table 2 in the linked document suggests a maximum of 35.4mph would be suitable for a 30mph limit

Hello Stephen,

I have been passed your email by Joe and thought best to seek your agreement direct on the approach and then share the agreed version with MSDC afterwards.

Would a suitable threshold of anything more than 10% of the intended speed limit, as a recorded weekday, 12 hour, 85th percentile speed, be a suitable threshold at which we investigate mitigation measures?

Joe,
Sorry that this got missed.

The info addresses the first half of the condition but not the 2nd (shown below for ease)

I would take the 2nd half to also indicate at what threshold additional mitigation is required rather than just a date for implementation. This then sets a clear level for any additional measures prior to the survey being undertaken.

Stephen

Condition

Prior to the use of the road for public traffic, details of future speed monitoring to ensure that vehicle speeds accord with the implemented speed limit shall be submitted to and approved by the Local Planning Authority. The details shall include details of when and how the speed surveys shall take place along with details of how and when mitigation measures should be implemented should vehicles be found to be travelling higher than the implemented speed limit.

Has any other additional information been submitted with this application? All that is hosted online is the application form with the following statement which does not address the condition.
Stephen

Please provide a full description and/or list of the materials/details that are being submitted for approval:

Speed surveys are proposed to be undertaken in accordance with Standards for Highways document "CA 185 - Vehicle speed measurement", within 6-months of the opening of the road to public. The locations of speed measurements will be agreed with WSCC Highways. In the event the speed measurement survey identifies speeds in excess of the speed limit, mitigation measures shall be proposed and agreed with WSCC Highways and shall be implemented within 18-months of receipt of the speed measurement survey results.
